Interview Basics

Research indicates:

➢ Your interviewer’s perception of your personality is crucial
➢ You need to know what you want and to show real motivation
➢ The decision gets made early in the interview; you need to start strong
➢ It is essential to exude confidence and assertiveness

Some types of interviews:

➢ Group interview (several representatives of a company simultaneously)
➢ Consecutive interviews with several representatives of a company
➢ Collective interview with several applicants at once
➢ Telephone/teleconference interview
➢ Case study

Before the interview:

➢ Understand as much as possible about the position, the organization, and where you fit
➢ Identify your main strengths and be ready to provide supportive evidence
➢ Anticipate how to help your interviewer “sell” you to others in the organization
➢ Research and set your salary range
➢ Prepare some questions for the interviewer – this is your chance to show your interest in the organization and start a two-way conversation
➢ Practice, practice, practice

During the interview

➢ Make a good first impression
➢ Send the right behavioral signals
➢ Communicate carefully: be concise, strive for poise, be clear, and be specific – use the STAR technique (Situation or Task, Action you took, Results you achieved)
➢ Participate, don’t dominate
➢ Close with confirmation of a major relevant strength... and enthusiasm
➢ Watch out for “canned” responses – be specific and authentic

After the interview

➢ Keep a log
➢ Send a thank you message to the interviewer(s)
➢ Follow up if necessary

Commonly Asked Questions

Interviews in French

- Your personality is very important (how you behave but also your hobbies, interests, etc.)
- The bigger the company, the more standardized the questions
- Smaller structures may appear disorganized
- Keep in mind who is “leading” the interview (them), but take every opportunity to get positive “stories” across
- Be ready to be “destabilized”
- Your understanding of French culture and your ability to work in a French work environment are very important
- Don’t sit down until invited to; watch basic protocol
