

Summer Employment

The more a summer job can fit into your total career plan, the better. What skills will you need when you graduate? See if you can find a way to develop them through summer employment. Are you curious about a particular field? Maybe there's a way to learn more about it through a summer job or internship.

Some skills – working with data or figures, dealing with clients, supervising or training staff, and developing expertise in computer applications or foreign languages – are likely to be valuable no matter what career you ultimately pursue. If you cannot secure paid employment in your chosen field, consider pursuing an internship while you earn money at some other job. A good time to begin your job search is in February-March.

GENERAL RESOURCES FOR JOB-HUNTING

- Employment ads can be found in local newspapers (check for online versions), other publications such as FUSAC in France, and on bulletin boards devoted to this purpose (the AUP Job Board in Student Affairs posts offers for tutoring, babysitting or translation work in Paris).
- Jobs in architectural, law, publishing, advertising and business firms can offer excellent career-related experience. Search for offices by using an industry-specific directory or an online service such as the Yellow Pages and send an unsolicited application as of January.
- Temporary agencies may be the answer if you are free for only a few weeks, cannot find a permanent summer opening, or would prefer working with several different companies. Manpower, Kelly, Page Personnel, and Adecco are examples of leading international agencies.
