Dear Teaching and Learning Center,

In this issue of the TLC News, we would like to draw your attention to a few recently published articles, which seem pertinent to our current situation as we enter the last week of remote teaching and our first and hopefully last fully online final exam week.

The first set of articles, Coping with Coronavirus: How faculty members can support students in traumatic times (stored in Teams), provides helpful suggestions. The article, “Let’s Add Compassion to Our Online Courses” (pp. 12-14) follows Bill’s message this week to which he attached a parent’s letter to a faculty member thanking him for showing compassion to students in these challenging times. Please join us today (April 17) at 5pm in the TLC Friday hangout to speak more about this and other issues and ideas that came up during the week. Also, if you are concerned about a student, we encourage you to contact Student Development (studentdevelopment@aup.edu) or Charlotte Vernier at evernier@aup.edu

The second article/link, shared by Ann Borel, who has been keeping a close eye on creative ways for us to conduct final exams, has excellent tips for remote exams and assessments from the Rutgers School of Arts and Sciences. Thanks Ann!

We hope you have a productive last week and a half of classes, and please don’t hesitate to contact us if you have any questions for the TLC.
