History of Economic Thought

Mercantilism; Classical Political Economy; Karl Marx; marginal revolution and neoclassical economics; Schumpeter and economic development; Keynes and macroeconomics.

Economy and Society:

An introduction to the fundamental concepts of economics and the social sciences, through the study of classical works in economic sociology: markets, the state, money, labor, technology, and comparative economic systems.

Intellectual Foundations of Political Economy:

Politics and economics in the early modern period; moral philosophy and political economy during the 18th century; Classical Political Economy; free trade and protectionism during the 19th century; critical reactions: socialism, historicism, marginalism; crises and cycles in capitalism.

Economic Methodology:

The problem of knowledge: positivism, hermeneutics and dialectics; 20th century philosophy of science: positivism and logical empiricism; the ‘growth of knowledge’ tradition: Popper, Kuhn, Lakatos; economic methodology: Mill, Keynes, Robbins, Hutchison and Friedman; contemporary topics.

20th Century Economic Thought:

Neoclassical monetary theory; the Austrian School; the socialist economic calculation debate; the neoclassical paradigm in the postwar era; evolution of the econometric approach; the Chicago School; game theory; the Cambridge School after Keynes; models of general equilibrium; contemporary heterodox approaches.

History of Money and Credit:

Money: origins and conceptual aspects; money as a sociological, political, and anthropological element; money and credit in Europe at the end of the Middle Ages; monetary and financial system in the early modern period; public finance and the consolidation of national financial systems; the emergence of the gold standard; crisis and decline of the gold standard during the interwar period; the Bretton Woods system; money and credit in Brazilian history.

International Trade Theory in Historical Perspective:

Protectionism, nationalism and the favorable-balance-of-trade doctrine; David Hume and the price-specie flow mechanism; the Physiocratic school: laissez-faire and the grain trade; Classical Political Economy and the triumph of free trade; critical reactions to classical free trade; the neoclassical theory of international trade; the Heckscher-Ohlin model; underdevelopment and international trade.

History of Economic Thought (graduate level):

John Stuart Mill and the classical tradition; Jevons and the critique of the classical tradition; Menger and the origins of the Austrian School; Marshall and the neoclassical reconciliation; the American institutionalist movement; early-20th century monetary theories; the socialist economic calculation debate; Pareto, Hicks and Samuelson: the neoclassical consumer theory; the Keynesian revolution; measurement and econometrics; Samuelson and the MIT approach; general equilibrium and formalization; the Chicago School; the Cambridge School after Keynes.

Theories of Social Network Analysis (graduate level):

Theoretical paradigms for the study of social networks: Bourdieu, White/Granovetter, Latour; interfaces with economic sociology; markets; institutions and organizations; performativity; money and finance; culture.

Introduction to the Science of Economics:

The object and method of economics; the fact-value dichotomy in the social sciences; classical political economy: circular flow, capital accumulation, Say's law, comparative advantages; neoclassical economics: methodological individualism, equilibrium, efficiency, comparative statics, market failures, the quantity theory of money; Keynesian economics: business cycles, effective demand, uncertainty and expectations, demand for money, investment and unemployment.

Research Techniques:

Definition of a research topic; structure of a research project; bibliographical research, primary and secondary data bases; bibliographic norms: citations, paraphrases, references; presentation and discussion of research projects.

From Paris to Maastricht: ideas, theories and decision processes:

The war context and the origins of the European integration program; the Marshall Plan and the Organization for European Economic Cooperation; Robert Schumann, Jean Monnet and Altiero Spinelli; the Treaty of Paris and the European Coal and Steel Community; the Treaties of Rome and the European Economic Community; De Gaulle, Adenauer, and the 'British problem'; stabilization and expansion, 1970-85; the Schengen Agreement and the Single European Act; the Treaty of Maastricht and the European Union.

Economics and International Politics during the Interwar Era (graduate level):

A set of seminar classes discussing classical texts from the interwar era that transcended the boundaries between economics and international politics. The course aims to situate interwar debates about the reconstruction of the world order within a larger narrative about the history of the social sciences.

Historiography (graduate level):

The nature and forms of historical knowledge; the main historiographical approaches of the 20th century, with special emphasis on the history of ideas and concepts: the Cambridge School of intellectual history; Begriffsgeschichte and the history of concepts; Weber, Dilthey and hermeneutics; social history and Marxist historiography; microhistory and the new cultural history; historical epistemology.

7. Research grants

2017-2020 Title: The Institutionalization of Academic Economics in Brazil, 1960-1980

Role: Leader

Funding: Brazilian Scientific and Technological Research Council (CNPq), Grant Number 401050/2016-5; Minas Gerais Foundation for the Support of Research (Fapemig), Grant Number CSA APQ-03560-16.

Description: The development of economics as an academic discipline is only a recent chapter of Brazilian history. Gathering speed from the middle of the 1960s onwards, the process led to an accelerated institutionalization of the economics profession, benefiting from generous resources channeled by North American foreign policy institutions, philanthropic foundations and centers of higher education. The Ford Foundation was profoundly involved, for around two decades, in the creation and consolidation of several Brazilian programs for graduated training and research in economics, which are still today recognized as among the most successful in the country. The engagement of North American institutions, however, took place under the aegis of the military regime that ruled the country between 1964 and 1985. In its policy for education, the regime insisted in the use of the social sciences as an instrument for creating a class of experts that could offer politically neutral advice. The project analyses this process of institutional creation and adaptation against the Brazilian sociopolitical and intellectual context, and within the framework of U.S.-Latin American relations during the Cold War.

- 2017-2020 Title: Economics, Political Economy and the Building of European Integration
Role: Member of the research team
Funding: European Commission, Jean Monnet Chair, Grant Number 587558-EPP-1-2017-1-BR-EPPJMO-CHAIR.
Description: The project recovers the intellectual origins of European integration in the interwar period, exploring the role played by economists in this process. European economists were deeply engaged, at the time, in debates about international politics, as evidenced in the cases of Lionel Robbins, Gunnar Myrdal, François Perroux, William Beveridge, Robert Triffin and John Maynard Keynes, among many other. Economists did not intervene in these discussions simply as economists, but rather participated in a markedly interdisciplinary conversation that involved social science researchers of widely different persuasions. The period under study thus constitutes a useful window into the process through which the frontiers between economics and political economy were being drawn at the time. One may expand this perspective to interpret how the field of International Political Economy could later absorb certain topics that had earlier belonged to economics, thus leading to the emergence of novel approaches to similar problems.
- 2015-2018 Title: Theory and Policy in the Formation of the European Union: a model for regional integration?
Role: Member of the research team
Funding: European Commission, Jean Monnet Module, Grant Number 565337-EPP-1-2015-1-BR-EPPJMO-MODULE
Description: The creation of the European Union, one of the most epoch-making political events of the 20th century, resulted from the interaction of several factors – political, institutional, economic and intellectual. EU treaties have been strongly marked by the context of their inception, which may partially explain both their successes and failures. As the EU becomes a model for other experiences of regional integration, one must avoid the simple transposition of the European case to other realities, without first taking into consideration the specific elements affecting each case. The project has thus two objectives. First, to analyze the historical circumstances surrounding the birth of the European Union, concentrating on the interaction between theories of regional integration, on one hand, and the several political, economic, and institutional forces bearing on this process, on the other. Second, to develop a comparative study of other recent experiences of regional integration, trying to clarify strategies that, although similar, may lead to different results due to varying politico-institutional contexts.

- 2013-2016 Title: Marx and the Notebooks on Crises
Role: Leader
Funding: Brazilian Scientific and Technological Development Council (CNPq), Grant Number 484849/2013-1.
Description: The project uses Notebook B113, composed by Karl Marx in 1869, as a window into the elaboration of the Marxian theory of crises. Notebook B113 is one of Marx's unpublished manuscripts, integrating the Marx-Engels Archives at the International Institute of Social History, in Amsterdam. The transcription of its contents and study of their use by Marx when writing the three volumes of Capital is a powerful instrument for understanding his investigations into the financial crisis of 1866. It will thus establish the basis for a large program of research on Marx's later theoretical works, and on the role of crises as recurrent phenomena in capitalist societies.
- 2011-2013 Title: Public Debates and Economic Discourse in Tudor and Stuart England
Role: Leader
Funding: Brazilian Scientific and Technological Development Council (CNPq), Grant Number 400959/2011-9.
Description: The project analyses the state and evolution of the economic ideas circulating in the English public sphere during the early modern period. Taking the public debates around the early 1620s commercial crisis as a reference point, the goal is to explore the relationship between the economic ideas presented in a systematic fashion in the pamphlets of Thomas Mun, Gerard de Malynes and Edward Misselden, on one hand, and the larger attitude of English society toward economic phenomena, on the other. Three aspects will be the subject of special consideration: the participation of prominent public figures such as Francis Bacon, Edward Coke and Lionel Cranfield in the investigations on the causes of the 1620s crisis; public discussions on monetary problems during the reign of Elizabeth, and their influence in the early 17th century; the short- and medium-term influence exerted by the 1620s debates on English public opinion.
